[1] Developed by South Carolina breeder Ed Ed pepper is red and gnarled, with a bumpy texture and a small pointed tail. In 2017, Guinness World Records declared it the hottest chilli in the world, surpassing the previous record-breaker, the Trinidad Butch T scorpion[2] Other varieties that may be more spicy, such as Dragon's Breath or Pepper X but are not officially confirmed with a higher Scoville scale than the Carolina Reaper. Pungency 30-day-old Carolina Reaper mature tree heat sensation or pungency detected when eating a Carolina Reaper comes from the density of capsaicinoids, especially capsaicin, which is directly related to the intensity of chili peppers and Scoville scales. [3] Raised in a Rock Hill, South Carolina, greenhouse by Smokin Ed Currie, owner of the PuckerButt Pepper Company in Fort Mill, the Carolina Reaper was certified as the world's hottest chilli by the Guinness World Records on August 11, 2017. [5] The official Guinness World Record heat level was 1,641,183 Scoville Thermal Units (SHU) in 2017, according to tests conducted by Winthrop University in South Carolina. This number is the average for the test batch; The hottest individual pepper is measured at 2.2 million SHU. [6] The hybrid is between a really hot La Soufriere pepper from the Caribbean island of St. Vincent and a Naga Viper pepper from Pakistan[7] and was named 'Reaper' due to its tail shape. It has been described as having a fruity taste, with initially sweet bites and then immediately switching to molten lava. [9] In May 2017, Mike Smith of St Asaph, Wales, working with Nottingham Trent University, claimed to have overtaken the Carolina Reaper with his Dragon's Breath pepper, reportedly 2.4 million SHUs and applied to the Guinness World Records for confirmation. [10] However, in September 2017, Ed Currie claimed to have bred a stronger pepper called Pepper X which had 3.18 million SHUs. [11] There was a possibility of severe headaches In April 2018, a report of a case of thunderstorm headaches in a 34-year-old man who was hospitalized several days after consuming a Carolina Reaper pepper of an dent size during a competition - included the hypothetical diagnosis of reversible brain contraction syndrome (RCVS). [13] There is no reason to believe that pepper compounds play a role in the mechanism of RCVS, other clinical explanations, such as the stress response from eating such a hot pepper, may explain the headaches. [14] Cultivation To grow, pepper has been described as a good comprehensive person to try at home by British er000 er000 james wong, who says they need temperatures of at least 18-20°C (64-68°F) and recommends growing in pots of 30-40 cm (12-16 in) to limit growth and fruit production sooner. [15] When fully ripe, two peppers occupy the palms. [9] See also The Hottest Chilli Reference ^ About Us. PuckerButt Pepper Co. Archives from the original on June 16, 2018.
